THE FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY. DELAWARE WATER GAP, Delaware River, near Stroudsburg, Ps., Aug. 22.—The most vivid and general association which Americans, young and old, have with this river is injeonnection with Washington, who, they are sure, crosso it, somewhere at some time, though it would puzzle most of them, I opine, to give localities and dates. Happening by some unaccountable the chance to remember that Washington crossed the river near Trenton, Christmas night, 1776. and fought the battle of Trenton the next day, defeating the enemy and capturing one thousand Hessians, I thought that I would see if my memory were any better than the memory of Isome fellow-tourists at the Water Gap house, I asked the quettion. One person aware in 1778 at Philadelphia; another, in 1775 at Gaston; a third, in 1777 at Burlington. A fourth man said that he did not know nor care anything about it; that he had grown so tired of reading and hearing about Washington that he never wanted to read or hear anything more; that he had come to the conclusion that the father of his country (with a sneer) was a dold humbug anyhow.

It is remarkable how general this feeling is with the present generation. The mere name, the father of his country, has grown to be SUGGESTIVE OF A JOKE, and is commonly coupled with the ludicrous. Scarcely any reference is made to Washington "I can not tell a lie" have become as well-worn jests as those on plumbers and mothers-in-law, tion. This is, of course, the reaction from the supreme laudation of Washington, from the We had been taught so persistently to believe imputation on ourselves. We were weary of the goody-goody man, as we imagined him to had more talent for falsification and had done some wholesome sinning. Theodore Parker once said that it was a comfort to know that $1.25. Washington could swear. He could swear on occasion, and do other highly improper things; so that we may as well accompt him as a creature of our own world.

His fame of perfection has injured his memory a good deal, and another generation will have to grow up to appreciate Washington as a great man who had as many defects as are required to prevent him from appearing intolerably faultless. Nothing hurts a public or private character more, in this critical, skeptical age, than to represent him without flaw. As I heard a rationalist declare recently, "I should have more patience with the Christian religion, if its supposed-to-be founder were not put forward as so infernally good." That was a genuine expression of the spirit of the last quarter of the nineteenth century.

IGNORAMUSES AS SCHOOL OFFICERS .- Among the simplest and most rational means of improving the public schools would be a general understanding, if not a law, requiring that every member of any school board must possess at least a common English education. This and Spun. is far from being the case now. Men of intelligence, who would not hire a man to curry a horse or milk a cow without reasonable assurance that he understood the business, vote for school directors without a question as to their fitness, and often with full knowledge of their utter unfitness. It is exasperating to turn to the school laws and note with what almost dictatorial powers the statute clothes school officers. They determine, without consulting the tax-payers, the amount to be levied for salaries of teachers, and all current expenses of the schools of the district; they employ and discharge teachers at their will; they determine what branches shall be taught and how;— they make all rules and regulations of the school; and from their flat there is practically no appeal. The law requires the teacher to procure a certificate of qualification to teach assigned for the hearing of said petition, and the common English branches. Whether the directors who employ him and have unlimited then to be holden at the Probate office, in the power over the school know enough to read this certificate or not is immaterial in law, and seems often a matter of indifference to the tax-payers and parents.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.
